

Blessed Trinity

It is a fundamental doctrine of orthodox Christian belief that the nature of God is to be understood in terms of The Most Holy Trinity.

God from God , consubstantial, incarnate.

Words and directions of thought which should not even be attempted in a brief homily.

So here we speak merely of aspects of the infinite.

After a brief encounter with writings on the nature of the Holy Trinity out of the confusion comes a dazed recognition of the dynamic nature of our God.

Nothing stays still. An understanding of Christ, is a reflection of the Father, the gift of a Father's love expressed in the presence of the Holy Spirit. God is beyond narrow definition. Beyond the control of prescribed analysis. There is always more.

Reflected in creation. Matter composed of atoms. Atoms composed of electrons protons and neutrons. Neutrons composed of Quarks. Quarks smashed in the hadron collider in order to recognise further constituents.

Nothing stays still, all is a dynamic interaction of creation.

The new life that nested in the porch at St Edward's. Fed by the birds that acted on instinct. Fed with the bugs and worms erupting in spring's vitality. Emerging from the soil so polluted yet defiant in the face of humanity's carelessness. Preparing for summer, aware of winter's bite.

Nothing stays still, all is a dynamic interaction of creation.

We foolishly attempt to control this force. Building constructs of security.

We have our job, our home, our health, our wealth.

Then there is change.

Covid. Economic crisis. Climate, age, birth, death.

In reality all is mystery.

All is a reflection of the divine.

Nothing stays still, all is a dynamic interaction of creation.

This is not to deny the vocation of participation, care, management, and production.

However in faith the pursuit of knowledge is a glorious celebration of the world, and not the means of domination and control. A divine gift itself, by which with humility we can explore, participate and proclaim,

"More I do not know, but look, isn't it wonderful?"

Nothing stays still, all is a dynamic interaction of creation

All a direct reflection of the dynamic nature of Father, Son and Holy Spirit

Beyond full understanding, Glorious Gift Beautiful.
