

I walked on a sea of colour

Many miles inland

A stone path laid

Like a raft

Leading above

The untamed defiance

Of that dangerous place

The sky and storm

Resting from the passionate embrace

That would take my life

With violent indifference

Not far below

In places tamed

Farms, town's, people

Go about their day

Obscuring with fragile constructions

Abandoned legend's and fears

Choosing the illusions of small security

Beneath these Gods and powers

Of life

And death
